

SCRIPT TEMPLATE

The Midnight Mind Quiet: A Body Scan Script for Anxious Sleepers

Finally quiet the loop — no app, no phone, no counting sheep.

$4.99

AiFactory · Aurislumen · June 2026

Finally quiet the loop — no app, no phone, no counting sheep.

What's Inside

- Breaks the anxious bedtime thought spiral using a proven body scan sequence designed for real overthinkers
- Completely phone-free — read it once before bed and guide yourself through it in total darkness
- Printable, customizable script template you own forever with no app, no subscription, no renewal fees
- Written in plain, calming language — no spiritual jargon, no prior meditation experience required

The Midnight Mind Quiet: Body Scan Script

Before You Begin

Read through your chosen version once during the day. At night, close the tab. This works from memory or with eyes-open glancing — not from scrolling.

Lie on your back. Arms at your sides, palms up. Let your feet fall open.

THOUGHT PARKING (Use This First — Every Time)

Before any body scan, do this. It takes under 60 seconds.

Take one slow breath in through your nose. Hold two seconds. Out through your mouth.

Now say silently: "My thoughts are real. They don't need solving right now."

Picture a parking lot. Each worry that surfaces — name it in one word. Bills. Meeting. That thing I said. See it pull into a space. It's not leaving. It's just parked. You'll pick it up tomorrow. It will still be there.

One more breath. Out through the mouth.

Now you begin.

For nights when you're exhausted but wired. Keep it moving.

Bring your attention to your feet. Notice any tension. Don't force it away — just notice it. Let your feet feel heavy, like they're sinking slightly into the mattress.

Move to your calves. Soften the muscles along the back of your legs. You're not going anywhere. They can rest now.

Your thighs. Your hips. Let the weight of your lower body be held completely by the bed. You don't have to hold yourself up.

Stomach. Let it be soft. Let it rise and fall without you managing it.

Chest. Each breath is slower than the last. You're not controlling this — just noticing it.

Shoulders. This is where most people carry the day. Let them drop. Even half an inch of release is enough.

Your jaw. Unclench. Let your tongue fall from the roof of your mouth. Let your face do nothing.

Your whole body is here. Heavy. Held. You don't need to think your way to sleep. Sleep comes to a quiet body.

Let go.

THE 10-MINUTE VERSION

For nights when the spiral is louder. More detail. More anchoring.

Take three breaths first. Each exhale a little longer than the inhale. Don't count — just let the exhale run out completely before you breathe in again.

Feet and toes.

Focus on your toes. Gently curl them — hold two seconds — release. Feel the difference between tension and release. That release is the feeling you're looking for everywhere. Let your feet go completely soft. Imagine warmth spreading across the soles.

Calves and shins.

Flex your feet toward your face — hold — release. Notice your calves loosening. The muscles that carried you all day don't need to stay ready anymore. Let them go slack.

Knees and thighs.

Squeeze your thighs together slightly — hold — release. Let the heaviness spread. Your legs are done working. They are simply resting on a surface that holds them completely.

Hips and lower back.

This area holds stress without announcing it. Press your lower back gently into the mattress — hold two seconds — release. Feel the space between your spine and the bed. Let that space soften.

Stomach.

Place your attention here, not your hands. Let your belly be loose. No holding in. No bracing. With each breath, let it rise fully, fall fully. Your body knows how to breathe. You can stop supervising it.

Chest and ribs.

Take a slow breath that fills your chest — hold — sigh it out through your mouth. One more time. The second sigh usually goes deeper. Let your ribcage feel open, wide, unheld.

Hands and arms.

Make a gentle fist — hold — open your hands wide — release. Feel the tingling in your fingers. Let your arms be completely passive. Heavy from fingertip to shoulder.

Shoulders and neck.

Shrug your shoulders up toward your ears — hold — let them drop completely. Notice where they actually land versus where you normally hold them. Stay with the drop. Your neck can be long and soft. Nothing to brace against.

Face.

Raise your eyebrows — hold — release. Scrunch your eyes — release. Press your lips together — release. Let your face go completely expressionless. Slack. Smooth. A sleeping face looks like nothing is happening. Make your face look like nothing is happening.

Full body.

Scan from feet to crown one time. If you find tightness anywhere, breathe toward it — not a forced breath, just your attention moving there — and let it soften on the exhale.

You are lying down. You are safe. There is nothing required of you until morning. Sleep is not something you do. It's something you allow.

Stop trying. Start allowing.

THE FULL 15-MINUTE DEEP VERSION

For the hard nights. The 2am thoughts. The weeks-long insomnia stretches. Do this one slowly.

Start with the Thought Parking section above. Don't skip it tonight.

Then read this slowly — or recall it slowly. Let each section take its time.

Ground yourself first.

Feel the bed beneath you. Not as a concept — as a physical reality. The mattress under your heels. Under your calves. Your tailbone. Your shoulder blades. The back of your head. The bed is holding all of this. You do not have to.

Say silently: "I am lying down. I am already resting. My body is already doing what it needs to do."

Feet. Begin here. Curl your toes under, hold for three seconds, release slowly. Now point your toes away from you — hold — release. Flex toward you — hold — release. Let your feet fall naturally outward. Heavy. Warm. Done.

Ankles. Rotate them slowly once each direction. Let them come to stillness.

Calves. Press the backs of your legs into the mattress. Hold four seconds. Release completely. Notice the softness. Stay with it for two full breaths.

Knees. Soften the area around your kneecaps. There's more tension here than people realize. Let it dissolve.

Thighs. Front and back. Squeeze the muscles — hold — release. The largest muscles in your body. When they let go, everything below lets go with them. Feel that cascade of release move downward.

Pelvis and hips. Tilt your pelvis slightly, pressing your lower back flat — hold — release and let your natural curve return. Breathe here. Two slow breaths into your low belly.

Lower back. You've been upright all day. This area has been working since you woke up. Let it decompress into the mattress. Imagine the small bones of your spine softening, each one settling.

Stomach. Let it be completely free. No holding. No posture. Just a soft belly rising and falling. Count three breaths here. Don't control them. Just count.

Solar plexus. The area just below your sternum. This is where anxiety lives in the body. Breathe in slowly — and on the exhale, imagine that spot loosening. Like a fist slowly opening. Do this three times. It won't fully release the first night. That's okay. You're teaching it.

Chest. Take the deepest breath you've taken tonight. Fill from the bottom up — belly first, then ribcage, then chest. Hold for four seconds. Open your mouth and let it fall out. Don't push it — let gravity do it. One more time.

Heart area. Not medically — just location. Place your awareness there. No action needed. Just noticing it beating. It's been doing this since before you were born. It knows exactly what to do. You can stop monitoring it.

Upper back and shoulder blades. Press them into the mattress — hold — melt them down. Feel the width of your upper back spread. Like wings that have folded for the night.

Shoulders. The architecture of stress. Shrug hard — really hard — hold for five seconds — drop completely. Wherever they land is where they belong. Don't readjust. Trust the drop.

Upper arms. Heavy. No purpose right now. Let them sink.

Elbows, forearms, wrists. Each joint soft. Not braced against anything.

Hands. Make fists — hold — spread your fingers wide — hold — release. Let your hands curl naturally, palms up or down, wherever they fall. Notice the subtle