

CHEAT SHEET

Sleep Thief Identifier: The Invisible Habit Audit

---

Find what's stealing your sleep — it's not what you think.

$3.99

AiFactory · Aurislumen · June 2026

Sleep Thief Identifier: The Invisible Habit Audit

Find what's actually keeping you awake — in under 5 minutes

---

How to Use This Sheet

Go through all 25 habits. Answer Yes or No honestly. Each Yes earns points shown in brackets. Total your score at the end of each section, then check your Sleep Thief Profile to find your top culprits.

You don't need to fix everything. Fix your top 1–3. That's enough to change your nights.

---

SECTION 1: Caffeine & Stimulants

Caffeine has a half-life of 5–7 hours. It's still in your system long after you stop feeling it.

| # | Habit | Yes/No | Points |

|---|-----|-----|-----|

| 1 | I drink coffee, tea, or energy drinks after 2pm | | [3] |

| 2 | I eat chocolate in the evening (any kind) | | [2] |

| 3 | I take pre-workout, diet pills, or weight-loss supplements | | [3] |

| 4 | I drink "decaf" coffee regularly — more than 1 cup | | [1] |

| 5 | I take pain relievers like Excedrin or Midol (contain caffeine) | | [2] |

Section 1 Score: ____/11

The Fix — one swap per habit:

Move your last caffeine cutoff to 1pm; switch to peppermint tea after.

Swap evening chocolate for a small handful of walnuts or tart cherries.

Take stimulant supplements before 11am only.

Cap decaf at 1 cup; it still contains 15–30mg of caffeine.

Check your pain reliever label; switch to a caffeine-free formula for evening use.

---

SECTION 2: Light & Screen Exposure

Blue light suppresses melatonin production. Your brain can't tell the difference between your phone and the sun.

| # | Habit | Yes/No | Points |

|---|-----|-----|-----|

| 6 | I use my phone or laptop within 1 hour of bed | | [3] |

| 7 | My bedroom has light coming in from outside or electronics | | [2] |

| 8 | I watch exciting, stressful, or fast-paced content at night (news, thrillers, action) | | [2] |

| 9 | I keep overhead lights fully bright until I go to sleep | | [2] |

| 10 | I don't get any natural light before noon most days | | [2] |

Section 2 Score: ____/11

The Fix:

Set a "last screen" alarm 60 minutes before bed; replace with a physical book or podcast.

Use blackout curtains or a sleep mask; cover glowing device lights with black tape.

Watch high-stimulation content earlier; wind down with something calm and low-stakes.

Switch to a lamp after 8pm — lower, warmer light tells your brain it's evening.

Step outside for 10 minutes before 10am; morning light anchors your sleep-wake rhythm.

---

SECTION 3: Exercise Timing

Exercise raises core body temperature and cortisol — both signals that tell your brain to stay awake.

| # | Habit | Yes/No | Points |

---|-----|-----|-----|

| 11 | I do intense exercise (running, HIIT, weights) within 3 hours of bedtime | | [3] |

| 12 | I don't exercise at all during the week | | [2] |

|

| 13 | My workouts are inconsistent — sometimes morning, sometimes evening | | [1] |

Section 3 Score: ____/6

The Fix:

Move intense workouts to morning or before 6pm; evening walks are fine.

Add a 20-minute walk 3x per week — even light exercise significantly deepens sleep.

Pick one consistent workout window and stick to it for 2 weeks to reset your rhythm.

---

SECTION 4: Food & Eating Patterns

Your digestive system and your sleep system share an internal clock. Disrupt one, you disrupt both.

| # | Habit | Yes/No | Points |

---|-----|-----|-----|

| 14 | I eat my largest meal within 2 hours of bedtime | | [3] |

| 15 | I go to bed hungry or skip dinner | | [2] |

| 16 | My mealtimes vary by more than 2 hours day to day | | [2] |

| 17 | I drink alcohol to relax or help myself sleep | | [3] |

| 18 | I eat spicy or acidic food in the evening regularly | | [1] |

Section 4 Score: ____/11

The Fix:

Finish dinner 2–3 hours before bed; if needed, have a small snack (crackers, banana) instead of a full meal late.

A small carb-protein snack before bed (toast with peanut butter) prevents early-morning waking from low blood sugar.

Eat your first and last meal at the same time daily — meal timing is a circadian anchor.

Alcohol blocks REM sleep; you may fall asleep faster but you'll wake at 2–3am when it metabolizes — swap for chamomile or tart cherry juice.

Move spicy food to lunch; it raises body temperature and can trigger reflux when horizontal.

---

| SECTION 5: Mental & Emotional Load                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       | SECTION 6: Sleep Environment & Schedule                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Your nervous system doesn't automatically switch off. Stress hormones from the day can peak at night if you don't create a transition.   #   Habit   Yes/No   Points   --- ----- ----- -----    19   I check work email or messages after 8pm     [3]     20   I do problem-solving, planning, or "thinking through things" in bed     [3]     21   I have no consistent wind-down routine before bed     [2]     22   I often feel mentally "wired" but physically tired at bedtime     [2]   Section 5 Score: ____/10 The Fix: Set a hard stop for work messages at 8pm; turn off notifications and leave your phone in another room. Keep a notepad by your bed — write down tomorrow's tasks before you get in; your brain stops rehearsing them. Build a 3-step routine that takes 15 minutes: same order, every night, signals "shutdown". "Wired but tired" is a cortisol spike — try 4-7-8 breathing (inhale 4 sec, hold 7, exhale 8) for 4 cycles to manually shift your nervous system. --- | The conditions you sleep in send biological signals that either support or fight sleep.   #   Habit   Yes/No   Points   --- ----- ----- -----    23   My bedroom is warmer than 68°F / 20°C at night     [2]     24   My sleep and wake times vary by more than 1 hour on weekends     [3]     25   I nap for longer than 30 minutes, or after 3pm     [2]   Section 6 Score: ____/7 The Fix: Drop the thermostat or open a window; your core body temperature must fall 1–2°F to initiate sleep. "Social jetlag" from weekend sleep shifts resets your rhythm every Monday — keep wake time within 1 hour 7 days a week. Cap naps at 20–25 minutes before 2pm; set an alarm so you don't accidentally kill your sleep drive. --- |

| YOUR TOTAL SCORE                                                                                                                                                                                                   | SLEEP THIEF PROFILE                             |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------|
| Add up all six section scores: Section 1: ____ Section 2: ____ Section 3: ____ Section 4: ____ Section 5: ____ Section 6: ____ TOTAL: ____ / 56 --- | 0–10 points: Your habits are solid. Your |

Niche: Adults who lie awake at night unable to fall asleep and want a non-medication solution · Format: Cheat Sheet ·
Generated: June 02, 2026